Politics and Quality of Life May 03 2020 This book explores the relationship between quality of life, policy, and political behavior. Using carefully collected, granular data, the authors create a measurement of quality of life for each county in the United States. After applying the index to each county and calculating scores, the results are applied to key political and social questions, such as, variation in voter turnout, electoral choices, and the allocation of federal aid. By tying quality of life directly to social and political outcomes, the index thus makes possible the development of policies that actually improve the quality of life of those they effect. This book is divided into three sections. Section One delves into the theory of quality of life research and the indicators used in the development of the index. Section Two explores the relationship between quality of life and various political phenomena such as trust in government, political participation, electoral politics, direct democracy, government spending, and local government. Section Three discusses suggestions for incorporating life quality in the political and policy process and identifying strategies for the direct application of these principals by policymakers. This book will be useful for students and scholars interested in political behavior, political sociology, policy, and quality of life studies, as well as policymakers interested in incorporating quality of life studies in their work.

Who creates local government and what are the criteria for local government creation in Nigeria May 27 2022 Essay from the year 2018 in the subject Politics - International Politics - Region: Africa, grade: 87%, Obafemi Awolowo University, course: Management Problems in Nigeria Local Government, language: English, abstract: The yearnings for development in rural communities and urban localities have increased call for more local government creation in Nigeria. However, the question of who creates local government remains one of the controversies of the contemporary Nigerian federal arrangement. The study analyses the question of local government creation in Nigeria and the criteria for such creation. Local government creation in Nigeria has been through numerous experiences that we tend to ask at some points in time: "who creates local government?" Numerous attempts have been geared towards bringing government nearer to the people at the most basic level. The importance of bringing government nearer to the people cannot be overemphasized. This translates to bringing services of great importance to the welfare and livelihood of the community. Such services have high positive implication on the standard of living of the people at this primary level of administration. The Nigerian experience has brought another dimension to discourse of local government being a residual affair of the state government as it is obtainable in classic federal states like United States, Canada amongst others. In other words, creation of local government is the prerogative of state, provincial or regional government. The Nigerian case through the local government creation tussle between the federal government and Lagos State government has left many wondering which level of government wields the power to create local government. This paper seeks to answer the shrouding question of 'who creates Local Government?' and highlight the criteria for creating local government in Nigeria. It does this through its various parts.

National planning policy framework 2012 Aug 30 2022 The National Planning Policy Framework 2012 sets out the Government's planning policies for England in achieving sustainable development and how these are expected to be applied. It sets out the requirements for the planning system only to the extent that it is relevant, proportionate and necessary to do so. It provides a framework within which local people and their accountable councils can produce their own distinctive local and neighbourhood plans, which reflect the needs and priorities of their communities. This Framework does not contain specific policies for nationally significant projects for which particular considerations apply. Divided into thirteen chapters, with three annexes, it looks at the following areas, including: building a competitive economy; ensuring town centre vitality; supporting a high quality communications infrastructure; delivering high quality homes; protecting the Green Belt; meeting the challenges of climate change, flooding and coastal change; conserving the natural and historic environments and facilitating the sustainable use of minerals.

*New Japan, Government and Politics Dec 30 2019 Excerpt from New Japan, Government and Politics The Japan of 1956 is a new Japan. Not by revolution but by quickened evolution it became a different political entity during the decade that followed World War II. A new constitution and new laws replaced the major elements in the corpus juris of the Meiji era. The central pillar of the national polity survived the reformist earthquake, but other institutions of power or prestige went down. How new the new Japan is cannot now be determined, since some of the newness may turn out to be veneer. Yet, if what is veneer wears off, the fact remains that we are observing a transition, that feudal-militarist Japan is passing, and that a new and interesting era has begun. The authors wish to acknowledge a debt not only to the scholars, statesmen, and journalists of Japan who have contributed to the source materials of the book, but to the thousands of humble translators employed during the postwar Occupation to make available in English a large number of essential documents. Without this help the book could not have been written. Acknowledgment is due also to members of the Occupation staff, particularly to Dr. Justin Williams of Government Section, and to Dr. Harry E. Wildes, Mr. Kenneth Colton, Lt. Col. David Tait, and Miss Naomi Fukuda of Civil Intelligence Section, for assistance in obtaining source materials as well as for their generous sharing of exceptional knowledge and insight. So far as humanly possible and that is not far enough reference has been made to the many workers in the Far Eastern vineyard who have, through their writing, provided additional aid.
